A Bayesian approach for the analysis of spatial capture-recapture data. Spatial capture-recapture models are used to estimate the total number of individuals in a study area and the number of individuals at observed locations (called index locations) with the key assumption that the total number of individuals is comprised of a large number of localities that are spatially independent. The authors propose a Bayesian approach for analyzing spatial capture-recapture data that uses a uniform spatial probability density to model the number of individuals at index locations. They show that the output of the model provides a stable estimate of the parameters of the underlying population model, such as the number of individuals, the number of localities, and their underlying spatial relationships. The paper provides a three-stage procedure for analyzing the proposed model. The first stage is a MCMC algorithm that provides sample values for the index locations, Poisson rate parameter, and total population number. The second stage is the Gibbs sampler for the unknown population. The third stage uses reversible jump MCMC to estimate the spatial parameters. The authors demonstrate the method through a simulation study and by analyzing a data set on anurans. Happy Birthday CAMPBELL'S CHEESE!!!!!!

Wednesday, February 24, 2010 I can't believe that it has been 6 years since I have been baking and blogging. Looking back at my first blog and how far I have come I am so proud of myself, and I think my blogging friends were very proud of me to as well. My first post was about Bakerella's Melon Berry Bark and posted on June 22, 2007. I made a very very small amount of samples to friends to get feedback on my blog and to get started...which I know was a challenge. I have
